

Developing local learning alternatives to residential learning

This work runs over an academic year where a cohort of young people are identified, and where statutory agencies and provider services are supported to develop an individual learning curriculum and support package for each young person that enables them to attend local learning provision or to move home and continue their learning in their home community.

OUR WORK

- An initial three day project planning workshop to scope the work and develop a clear and coherent plan to achieve your outcomes.
- Ongoing support to all relevant stakeholders to develop the necessary support packages and individual learning curriculum.
- An individually tailored consultancy programme of support specific to your own area's needs and circumstances.

WHY PARADIGM?

- Support from the UK's leading experts in this area.
- Access to all of the latest current thinking and best practice ideas.
- A cost-effective way to develop positive local person centred options for young people.
- Paradigm has played a formative role in the development of individual funding tools identifying funding available to develop individual curricula for young people using local colleges and learning providers.

WHAT YOU WILL ACHIEVE

This work will help you to:

- Support young people to stay at home or move back home for their learning.
- Develop an individualised learning curriculum and comply with current policy and best practice.
- Open up new opportunities for young people in your area.
- Using a person's individual budget can open up opportunities for all those supporting the young person to develop an individual pathway into adulthood that can be put in place well before a young person leaves college and help everyone to work better together.
